

Vase representing a man on a totora horse (Chancay, 1000-1400 AD).

The Chancay society also implemented fishing techniques, which give the impression of the use of floats, and also small boats such as the so-called totora horses, like the Moche people. They also used hooks and nets to catch fish from the cold sea of the central coast of Peru.

Bottle depicting a three-body boat associated with two rafters (Lambayeque, 800-1375 AD)

Bottle depicting a character on a totora raft transporting akillas or silver vessels (Lambayeque, 800-1375 AD).

Whistling bottle showing a main character associated with fishing reliefs (Lambayeque, 800-1375 AD).

The Lambayeque, like other northern cultures, were eminent makers of reed boats that, with great skill, were launched into the sea. This society is known for the massive consumption of marine products, among which are corvina, catfish, bonito, among others.